WHAT YOU'LL NEED:

Fabric (pretty much any kind will work) for the body, face and bottom. Weighted filler and stuffing. Embroidery floss and trim. Print out the pattern. It's on a 1" grid.

GENERAL INFO:

Your seam allowance will change depending on how big the trim you use is and how much of it you want it to show. How the base will fit onto the body will be determined on how big the seam allowance is. Sometimes the base and bottom will line up exactly, more often the base will be larger. This should make sense once you get going. If in doubt, just fudge it. That's how I get them done.

TO MAKE:

Pin the trim to the inner edge of the right side of one of the three sides.

Sew trim to side leaving as much of the trim to show as you'd like. (see note above on seam allowances)

Do the same with the trim on the other side. Pin another third to side with trim and sew just inside the existing stitching. Do same to the last third.

Sew up the last 2 sides leaving a gap for stuffing.

Pin the bottom and sew. Fill the bottom with weighted something. I used the fancy plastic pellets this time but the lentils I used on the others are actually heavier and worked just as well and are cheaper. Stuff with polyfill.

Blindstitch the gap together.

FINISHING:

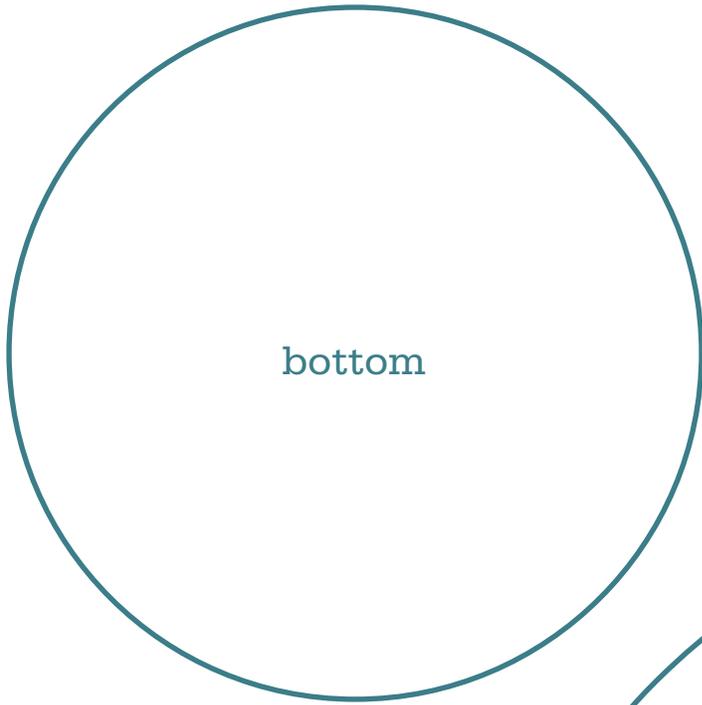

Applique face on front. You can blanket stitch a felt circle on for the face or applique a cotton face with edges folded under. To do that sew about 1/4" in front edge and clip edges, pin face to body, fold sides under as you go and sew down at stitching using a slipstitch. Remove machine stitching when finished.

Now you're ready to embellish. Some eyes and a mouth, some decorative stitches around the face, a little blusher.
